

Establishing the Attorney-Client Relationship

The establishment of the attorney-client relationship involves two elements: a person seeks advice or assistance from an attorney; and the attorney appears to give or agrees to give the advice or assistance. If the client reasonably believes that there is an attorney-client relationship, then the lawyer does have professional obligations to that client. Therefore, it is essential that both attorney and client understand whether the attorney-client relationship exists.

Before establishing an attorney-client relationship, you will need to determine if you have a conflict of interest prohibiting your representation. Because of its importance, Conflicts of Interest is addressed in a separate section in this Guide. (See page 20.)

Several steps lead to the formation of the attorney-client relationship:

- initial client contact;
- screening;
- interview;
- accepting or declining representation; and
- confirming the acceptance or declination in writing.

The following forms will assist you and your office in the decision whether to accept the representation and how to do it.

Initial Client Contact and Screening

The first contact a potential client usually has with your office is by telephone. Courteous, respectful treatment of all callers is important. The receptionist or designated staff member should complete a Consultation Form, similar to the one on pages 10-11, to obtain the basic information for you to determine if you even want to interview the potential client and to assist in screening for conflicts. A major consideration is whether you have the necessary expertise to handle the case. If not, you should refer the caller to another attorney. Failure to know or properly apply the law accounts for many malpractice claims in Louisiana.

Also, you should use the form to determine if there is an obvious conflict. As discussed in the Conflicts Section, determining conflicts of interest is ongoing, but many conflicts can be avoided by initial screening.

Interview

The initial interview is not just a way for the potential client to determine whether to hire you. It's also your opportunity to decide whether you have a conflict of interest and cannot represent the client, whether you want to represent the client, and whether you have the expertise to do so. You should have the client complete the remainder of the Consultation Form, which you should review immediately before the meeting. Be thorough and listen carefully, both to what is said and how it is said.

First impressions are key. The prospective client should be warmly welcomed by you and your staff, thanked for coming, treated with respect, and seen timely.

If the initial interview reveals that you are not qualified to practice in the area of law at issue, decline the representation. If you take the case anyway, disclose your limitations. Do not make misrepresentations about experience.

Communication is key to a positive relationship. Ideally, communication with the client should not be set out separately as a discrete task; it should be a part of every action you take. But so many attorneys have difficulty with this aspect of representation that it is worth reviewing. Communication in the initial consultation involves (at a minimum) making sure that:

- the client understands the scope of the representation;
- the client understands the type of fee arrangement, what fees are charged, why, and what they will be applied to;
- the client understands how client trust money will be used;
- you have all the facts you need to make sure the client's objectives have a good faith basis;
- the client understands what additional actions on her part are necessary to handle the matter (additional documentation, last attempt before suit to come to terms with opposing party, etc.);
- the client understands what you believe is the desired objective, but that you are not guaranteeing a particular result; and
- you understand exactly what it is that the client wants you to do.

Client Screening — Avoid the Difficult Client

As a rule, you should avoid inordinately demanding clients, untruthful clients, those with unreasonable expectations, uncontrollable clients, and clients with a personal vendetta. Also, clients who “lawyer shop” or have previously been represented by other attorneys in the same or a similar matter may be difficult to control or please.

Accepting or Declining Representation and Confirming in Writing

After you have screened a prospective client, conducted the conflicts check, and gathered information and impressions through an initial interview, you must tell the client whether you will represent her, preferably in writing. Sample letters of engagement and non-engagement are on pages 12 and 13, respectively.

The engagement letter welcomes a new client, confirms the scope of the representation, and clearly sets forth the fee arrangement. All new clients should receive an engagement letter. The fee arrangement should be put in writing and either made part of that engagement letter or attached to it. Contingent fee contracts are required to be in writing. Fee arrangement letters can be found in the Fees and Billing Section of this Guide. (See pages 44-51.)

And, yes, it is recommended that, when you decide not to represent someone, you should send non-engagement letters so it will be abundantly clear that you are not representing the prospective client and that you have no further professional obligations to the person. You should try not to make any judgment regarding the merits of the person's case, but should urge the person to be mindful of time constraints and suggest that she may want to confer with another attorney. You should return any original documents the prospective client left for review.

If you decide to represent an existing client in a new matter, you should send a letter explaining that relationship. Again, the fee arrangement for that matter also should be confirmed in writing.

The following is a quick checklist to ensure that you are taking the major steps in establishing attorney-client relationships or in declining representation. Forms follow the checklist. These forms are on the CD as well.

Establishing the Attorney-Client Relationship Checklist

Use this checklist to ensure that you are taking all the major steps to successfully establish the attorney-client relationship or decline representation.

- Have receptionist or staff member complete initial section of Consultation Form.
- Have staff member do initial conflicts check, making any judgment calls yourself.
- Review the Consultation Form to determine whether to refer the case or to have the receptionist set the appointment.
- Have the prospective client complete the Consultation Form when she arrives for the appointment.
- Review the Consultation Form immediately prior to interviewing the potential client.
- Do full consultation with the prospective client, including completion of substantive interview forms for certain areas of the law.
- Explain to the prospective client whether the firm will accept or decline representation, the scope of the representation, the fee arrangement, and what is still needed from the client.
- Send engagement or non-engagement letter to the prospective client.
- If you agree to handle a new matter, send another engagement letter to reflect the addition.

10. Prior Claims and Lawsuits

Many cases have been damaged beyond repair by a history of other claims and lawsuits which your attorney did not know about. It is NOT the fact that one has had other claims or lawsuits that is important, for one will not be penalized by a court or jury if the claims are reasonable and genuine. It is the DENIAL of previous claims and suits that damages the case. List every claim you have ever made for personal injury or property damage, and give details:

15. Prior Accidents and Injuries

Failure to mention other accidents or injuries can undermine a lawsuit, no matter how trivial they may seem. List here every such incident, whether it resulted in a claim for damages or not, stating the date, place, nature of the accident and extent of your injuries. If none, so state: _____

16. Illness or Disease

No matter how trivial an illness, either before or since your accident, we must know about it. This is particularly true if there is any connection with your present physical complaints. At the trial, the defendant will have a complete history of your past physical condition, made available through medical and hospital records, veteran's records, insurance records, etc.
