Children’s Law Committee releases educational video for children in CINC cases

The Louisiana State Bar Association’s Children’s Law Committee released a new educational video to assist children entering the court system because of allegations of neglect and/or abuse. The film, titled “Who’s Looking Out for Me? An Introduction to the Court System,” provides a summary of the legal process and an explanation of each individual the child will encounter during the proceedings, such as a judge, lawyer, bailiff and case worker.

The film is designed specifically for children entering “Child in Need of Care” proceedings, which are initiated following an allegation of abuse or neglect against the child’s parent or caregiver.

“Once ‘Child in Need of Care’ proceedings are initiated, it is the court’s responsibility to determine what is in the best interest of each child,” said Orleans Parish Assistant District Attorney Cherrilyne W. Thomas, who co-chairs the Children’s Law Committee. “That process can be frustrating and confusing, especially for young children. This video will help parents and attorneys explain the procedure to kids, and also encourage young people to make their voices heard in the process.”

In addition to legal concepts, the film includes a tour of an actual courtroom and interviews and valuable insight from young adults who experienced this process when they were younger. “Obviously these issues are sensitive, and we are particularly grateful to the young adults in the film who were willing to share their personal stories and provide both encouragement and practical advice,” said 4th Circuit Court of Appeal Judge Sandra Cabrina Jenkins, who co-chairs the Children’s Law Committee.

The film is available in both English and Spanish at www.lsba.org/childrenslaw/. For more information, email nicole.louque@lsba.org.
