

Christie Wood is a native of Start, Louisiana (the “map dot” referred to by Tim McGraw). Ms. Wood is a 2008 LSU law school graduate, who moved to Central Louisiana when she began her law career at Gold, Weems, Bruser, Sues & Rundell. She then practiced with Faircloth, Melton, and Sobel in Alexandria for a while before returning to her small-town roots and partnering with the firm of Wilson & Wilson, in Jena, Louisiana.

Ms. Wood currently lives and practices in Jena, where she serves a wide variety of clients, ranging from successions, titles, and business litigation to family law. When she is not at work, she is chasing her two children at the ball field. She loves going to concerts and has a theory that there is a country song for every situation in life.
