INTRODUCTION

Numerous plaintiffs like Lucille Taylor have filed First Amendment challenges to integrated bars around the country following the Supreme Court's decision in Janus v. American Federation of State, County, & Municipal Employees, 138 S. Ct. 2448 (2018). Janus limited the circumstances under which a public-sector union may charge mandatory fees to nonmembers for whom the union serves as exclusive representative in bargaining with the government. Although the Supreme Court has twice considered and twice upheld the constitutionality of integrated bars in the face of indistinguishable claims, these plaintiffs invite courts to hold that Janus overruled those controlling precedents. No court has accepted that invitation. And the Supreme Court has now twice denied petitions for certiorari raising the issue.

To resolve Taylor's claims in her favor, this Court would have to conclude that Janus implicitly overruled the Supreme Court's directly controlling precedents. "The Supreme Court, however, has explicitly prohibited just such a finding." Grutter v. Bollinger, 288 F.3d 732, 743 (6th Cir. 2002) (en banc), aff'd, 539 U.S. 306 (2003). This Court must follow the Supreme Court's controlling case law, "leaving to th[at] Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions." Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 237 (1997).

Taylor's claims also fail for additional reasons. Her free-association claim challenging the requirement that she belong to the State Bar of Michigan ("SBM") is a red herring. Michigan indisputably possesses the power to require lawyers to associate for regulatory and licensing purposes. Likewise, the material differences between public-sector unions and SBM provide ample reason to conclude that Janus did not disturb the Supreme Court’s precedent concluding that mandatory bar dues do not violate a lawyer’s free-speech rights. SBM’s mandatory dues pass constitutional muster because they fund government speech unconstrained by the First Amendment and, in the alternative, because they satisfy the “exacting scrutiny” test applied in Janus.

For all these reasons, Defendants¹ respectfully request that this Court deny Taylor’s motion for summary judgment and enter judgment in favor of Defendants.

BACKGROUND

Legal background

This case continues a long-running battle about mandatory membership in bar associations that have been integrated into state government to play a central role in regulating the legal profession and improving the administration of justice. The Supreme Court has twice considered and twice upheld the constitutionality of integrated bars.

First, in Lathrop v. Donohue, 367 U.S. 820 (1961), the Court rejected the plaintiff-lawyer’s claim that Wisconsin’s requirement that he become a member of and pay dues to an integrated bar violated his First Amendment right to free association. 367 U.S. at 822. A majority of the Court agreed that the mandatory membership and dues requirements did not unconstitutionally impinge on the lawyer's right to free association given Wisconsin's legitimate interest in regulating and improving the quality of legal services. Id. at 843 (plurality opinion); id. at 849–50 (Harlan, J., concurring); id. at 865 (Whittaker, J., concurring). The Court did not reach the question whether the bar's use of dues to support its political activities violated the lawyer's free-speech rights. Id. at 844 (plurality opinion).

Then, in Keller v. State Bar of California, 496 U.S. 1 (1990), the Supreme Court took up the question reserved in Lathrop. It unanimously rejected the plaintiffs' claim that the use of their mandatory dues to fund the California bar's political and ideological activities violated their free-speech rights. 496 U.S. at 9. It held that an integrated bar may “constitutionally fund activities germane” to the state's “interest in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services.” Id. at 13–14. “[T]he guiding standard,” the Court explained, is “whether the challenged expenditures are necessarily or reasonably incurred for the purpose of regulating the legal profession or ‘improving the quality of the legal service available to the people of the state.’” Id. at 14 (quoting Lathrop, 367 U.S. at 843 (plurality opinion)). Under this standard, a bar could not, for example, use mandatory dues to advocate for gun control, but it could use mandatory dues to propose new ethics rules. Id. at 16.

The Supreme Court has never overruled Lathrop or Keller. To the contrary, the Court recently reaffirmed Keller's continuing vitality in a case that struck down mandatory membership and dues requirements for home healthcare workers.

Harris v. Quinn, 134 S. Ct. 2618, 2643 (2014) (“[O]ur decision in this case is wholly consistent with our holding in Keller.”).

In Janus, the Court overruled Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, 431 U.S. 209 (1977), a case in which the Court held that a public-sector union may use mandatory agency fees to fund expressive activities germane to the union’s purposes. 138 S. Ct. at 2463, 2486. Applying “exacting scrutiny”—under which a compelled subsidy of speech must “serve a compelling state interest that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms,” id. at 2465 (internal quotation marks omitted)—Janus held that public-sector union agency fees violate the First Amendment, id. at 2486. Public-sector unions are the exclusive mouthpieces for public employees in the collective bargaining process, including nonmembers. After Janus, public-sector unions must obtain affirmative consent before exacting an agency fee from a nonmember. Id. at 2486.

Plaintiffs have filed challenges to integrated bars around the country post-Janus, contending that Janus signaled the Supreme Court’s interest in reexamining the constitutionality of integrated bars. Those challenges have universally failed.²

² Jarchow v. State Bar of Wis., No. 19-3444, 2019 WL 8953257, at *1 (7th Cir. Dec. 23, 2019), cert. denied, No. 19-831, 2020 WL 2814314 (U.S. June 1, 2020); Fleck v. Wetch, 937 F.3d 1112, 1114–15, 1118 (8th Cir. 2019), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1294 (2020); McDonald v. Sorrels, No. 19-CV-00219, slip op. at 10–12 (W.D. Tex. May 29, 2020); Boudreaux v. La. State Bar Ass’n, No. 19-CV-11962, 2020 WL 137276, at *24 (E.D. La. Jan. 13, 2020); Schell v. Gurich, 409 F. Supp. 3d 1290, 1298 (W.D. Okla. 2019); Gruber v. Oregon State Bar, No. 18-CV-1591, 2019 WL 2251826, at *9 (D. Or. Apr. 1, 2019) (deciding companion case, Crowe v. State Bar of Oregon, No. 18-CV-2139, in same opinion). The plaintiffs in Sorrels, Boudreaux, Schell, Gruber, and Crowe have filed appeals.

Indeed, two separate cases have already reached the Supreme Court, where the plaintiff-petitioners asked the Court to overrule Lathrop and Keller. Petition for a Writ of Certiorari, Fleck v. Wetch, 140 S. Ct. 1294 (2020) (No. 19-670), 2019 WL 6341142; Petition for a Writ of Certiorari, Jarchow v. State Bar of Wis., No. 19-831, 2020 WL 2814314 (U.S. June 1, 2020), 2019 WL 7423388. The Supreme Court denied certiorari in both cases. Fleck v. Wetch, 140 S. Ct. 1294 (2020) (mem.); Jarchow v. State Bar of Wis., No. 19-831, 2020 WL 2814314 (U.S. June 1, 2020) (mem.). As Justice Thomas acknowledged in his dissent from the denial of certiorari in the second case, the Court’s refusal to reexamine Keller closes the door for plaintiffs like Taylor. Jarchow, 2020 WL 2814314, at *2 (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (“[A]ny challenge to our [integrated-bar] precedents will be dismissed for failure to state a claim.”).

Factual background³

A. SBM’s background and purposes

The Michigan Legislature established SBM as a public body corporate in 1935. JSMF ¶¶ 1–2, PageID.84; Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.901. By statute, all persons licensed to practice law in Michigan must be a member of SBM. JSMF ¶ 3, PageID.85; Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.901. The Michigan Supreme Court has plenary authority over the organization, government, members, conduct, and activities of SBM. JSMF ¶ 11, PageID.85; Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.904. The Supreme Court has exercised this authority by promulgating the Rules Concerning the State Bar of Michigan (“RCSBM”)⁴ as well as various administrative orders. Since SBM’s inception, the Michigan Supreme Court has declared that SBM’s mission is to “aid in promoting improvements in the administration of justice and advancements in jurisprudence, in improving relations between the legal profession and the public, and in promoting the interests of the legal profession” in Michigan. JSMF Ex. A (RCSBM) at R. 1, PageID.99; see also RCSBM § 1 (1935) (substantially identical).

The RCSBM provide that each member must pay dues, which fund SBM’s operations. JSMF Ex. A (RCSBM) at R. 4(A), PageID.101. The dues consist of three amounts set by the Supreme Court to fund (1) Michigan’s Attorney Grievance Commission and Attorney Discipline Board; (2) SBM’s Client Protection Fund, which reimburses clients who have been victimized by lawyers; and (3) SBM’s other expenses. Id. SBM also has established several voluntary subject-matter-specific sections, on whose behalf it collects separate dues from attorneys who join them. JSMF Ex. A (RCSBM) at R. 12(1), PageID.111. Taylor does not challenge such voluntary section dues. JSMF ¶ 26, PageID.88.

B. SBM’s activities

SBM engages in a wide array of activities in service of its mission. Its primary activities are regulatory and include attorney-licensing-database management, character and fitness recommendations, maintaining the official record of attorneys licensed to practice in Michigan, compliance administration functions, pro hac vice admissions administration, and unauthorized-practice-of-law investigation and prosecution. See JSMF ¶¶ 27, 43, PageID.88–89, 92. SBM also performs ancillary services, including the Client Protection Fund, the Lawyers and Judges Assistance Program focused on mental health and substance-abuse dependency, ethics guidance, pro bono activities coordination, lawyer referral, coordination of legal aid services, and equal access programs. JSMF ¶ 27, PageID.88–89. Activities in these categories consume well in excess of 90 percent of SBM’s budget. JSMF ¶ 43, PageID.92.

SBM also engages in certain public policy activities related to the legal profession and the administration of justice, as roughly defined in Keller and refined by the Michigan Supreme Court. JSMF ¶ 39–40, PageID.91–92. The Michigan Supreme Court has adopted administrative orders that direct whether and how SBM may conduct those activities using mandatory dues. The current order,⁵ in effect since 2004, authorizes SBM to use mandatory dues to analyze pending legislation and provide content-neutral technical assistance to legislators on request. JSMF Ex. C (Admin. Order No. 2004-01) at 2, PageID.131. The order also allows SBM to fund activities of an ideological nature if they reasonably relate to:

⁵ The current administrative order, Administrative Order No. 2004-01 (Mich. Feb 3, 2004), is attached as Exhibit C to the Joint Statement of Material Facts. The parties agree that, at all times relevant to this lawsuit, SBM operated in accordance with Administrative Order No. 2004-01 and did not exceed the limits on bar speech set in Keller. JSMF ¶¶ 39–40, PageID.91–92.

- (A) the regulation and discipline of attorneys;
- (B) the improvement of the functioning of the courts;
- (C) the availability of legal services to society;
- (D) the regulation of attorney trust accounts; and
- (E) the regulation of the legal profession, including the education, the ethics, the competency, and the integrity of the profession.

Id. at 1, PageID.130.

Before undertaking any of the foregoing activities, the order requires SBM to provide all members at least two weeks' notice, via its website, that SBM may consider taking a position on proposed legislation at a public meeting. Id. at 2, PageID.131.⁶ After the notice period, the issue of whether to support the proposed legislation may be taken up at a public hearing of SBM's 33-member Board of Commissioners or its 150-member Representative Assembly. Id. SBM's members may make comments at such hearings. Id. The results of all Board and Assembly votes must be posted to SBM's website as soon as possible after the vote and published in the next issue of the Michigan Bar Journal. Id.

A member who believes that SBM has violated the administrative order may file a written challenge and seek revocation of the offending position and reimbursement of the activity's cost. Id. at 3, PageID.132. The challenger may also seek Michigan Supreme Court review. Id. Since the current administrative order's adoption in 2004, there has been only one member challenge. JSMF ¶ 45, ⁶ SBM discharges this obligation through the Public Policy Resource Center section of its website, which is available at <https://www.michbar.org/publicpolicy/Home>.

PageID.93. As explained in greater detail below, Taylor has never filed a challenge or sought reimbursement.

SBM has operated within the lines set by the Michigan Supreme Court.

JSMF ¶ 39, PageID.91–92. In the current legislative session, for instance, it has

- supported legislation extending the sunset of Michigan’s e-filing system fee, to ensure that the e-filing system remains adequately funded;
- supported legislation setting out permissible venues for prosecutions for delivery of controlled substances causing death; and
- opposed legislation that exempted a class of people from jury service.

JSMF Ex. D (Summary of Positions During 2017–18 and 2019–20 Legislative Sessions) at 1–2, PageID.136–37.

When SBM engages in ideological activities, its positions are neither promulgated nor published with an indication that they have come from any SBM member or group of members. JSMF ¶ 41, PageID.92. Instead, SBM’s advocacy is always attributed to SBM. Id. SBM’s members are always free to speak privately or publicly about any issue on which SBM has deliberated or taken a position. Id. ¶ 46, PageID.93. Likewise, SBM’s members are free to join other bar associations and special-interest groups that take positions contrary to those taken by SBM. Id. ¶ 48, PageID.93. For all these reasons, SBM is not in any way its members’ exclusive representative in the collective-bargaining sense. Id. ¶ 47, PageID.93.

C. Taylor’s complaint

Taylor is a longstanding member of SBM. (Compl. ¶ 24, PageID.5.) She does not necessarily disagree with SBM’s public policy positions. (Compl. ¶ 5, PageID.2.)

Indeed, aside from SBM's support for its integrated status, Taylor does not identify even a single position with which she disagrees, and she has never challenged any of SBM's particular positions under the administrative order or filed a comment regarding a proposed SBM position. JSMF ¶¶ 49–50, PageID.93; see also id. ¶¶ 51–54, PageID.93–94. Taylor nonetheless alleges that SBM's "uses of mandatory dues to carry out functions that opine on a number of public policy issues related to the legal profession" violates her First Amendment rights to free association and free speech. (Compl. ¶¶ 15–16, PageID.4.)

Relying on Janus, Taylor brings two claims. First, she alleges that the portion of SBM's mandatory dues in excess of the amount that funds the Attorney Grievance Commission and the Attorney Discipline Board is an unconstitutional compelled subsidy of speech, thereby violating her free speech right. (Compl. ¶ 39, PageID.6.) Second, she alleges that Michigan's requirement that she be a member of SBM as a condition of practicing law violates her right to free association. (Compl. ¶ 43, PageID.7.) Taylor seeks (1) a declaration that compulsory membership and the mandatory payment of SBM dues for non-disciplinary actions violates her First Amendment rights, and (2) a permanent injunction permitting SBM to collect compulsory dues for non-disciplinary actions only if she first voluntarily authorizes that payment. (Compl. at 7–8, PageID.7–8.)

LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment is appropriate "if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). Summary judgment is especially appropriate in cases requiring the application of law to undisputed facts, as in this case. E.g., Bank of Am. Nat. Tr. & Sav. Ass'n v. Shirley, 96 F.3d 1108, 1111 (8th Cir. 1996); Brinson v. Brinson, 334 F.2d 155, 160–61 (4th Cir. 1964).

ARGUMENT

I. Lathrop* and Keller control this case and mandate summary judgment in favor of Defendants

Under Lathrop and Keller, Taylor's free-association and compelled-speech claims fail as a matter of law. Taylor effectively concedes as much. Yet she invites this Court to hold that Janus implicitly overruled those directly controlling cases. This Court should decline Taylor's invitation because only the Supreme Court has the prerogative of overruling its decisions. Because Lathrop and Keller are directly controlling and have not been overruled, this Court must apply them and should enter judgment for Defendants on Taylor's claims.

A. Under Lathrop, Taylor's free-association claim fails as a matter of law

Taylor alleges that Michigan's mandatory-SBM-membership rule, standing alone, violates her right to free association. (Compl. ¶ 43, PageID.7.) But she implicitly concedes that her claim fails if Keller controls. See Br. at 2, PageID.147 ("Keller has therefore been overturned as both its foundations and the standard it employed for reviewing free speech and association claims has been overruled." (emphasis added)); see also id. at 28, PageID.173 (arguing that this Court should enter judgment for Taylor because Janus overruled Keller); JSMF ¶ 40, PageID.92.

Lathrop decided a free-association claim on all fours with Taylor’s—and it therefore dooms Taylor’s claim. Lathrop long predated Abood and is unaffected by Abood’s overruling, yet Taylor’s brief hardly engages Lathrop.

The Lathrop majority squarely held⁷ that compulsory membership, including the payment of dues, in an integrated bar does not violate a lawyer’s right to free association. Lathrop v. Donohue, 367 U.S. 820, 843 (1961) (plurality opinion) (“Given the character of the integrated bar shown on this record, in light of the limitation of the membership requirement to the limited payment of reasonable annual dues, we are unable to find any impingement upon protected rights of association.”); id. at 849–50 (Harlan, J., concurring) (agreeing with the plurality and arguing that the Court should have reached and rejected the lawyer’s free-speech claims regarding the uses of his dues); id. at 865 (Whittaker, J., concurring) (explaining “that the State’s requirement that a lawyer pay to its designee an annual fee . . . as a condition of its grant . . . of the special privilege . . . of practicing law in the State . . . does not violate any provision of the United States Constitution”). Under Lathrop, Taylor’s claim fails as a matter of law.

B. Under Keller, Taylor’s compelled-speech claim fails as a matter of law

Taylor’s compelled-speech claim runs headlong into Keller, in which the Supreme Court unanimously held that an integrated bar may use mandatory dues to fund expressive activities germane to regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services. Keller v. State Bar of Cal., 496 U.S. 1, 13–14 (1990). As Taylor concedes, her claim fails as a matter of law under Keller. JSMF ¶ 40, PageID.92 (“Plaintiff does not challenge that, at all times relevant to this lawsuit, the State Bar of Michigan has constrained itself to public policy advocacy that the U.S. Supreme Court held allowable in Keller”); see also Br. at 2, PageID.147.

C. Because Lathrop and Keller are directly controlling precedents, this Court may not decide that Janus overruled them sub silentio Taylor contends that Janus overruled Keller and that her claims therefore are viable. Br. at 22, PageID.167. But Janus did not cite, much less explicitly overrule, Keller or Lathrop, so Taylor’s argument necessitates a finding that Janus implicitly overruled these cases. “The Supreme Court, however, has explicitly prohibited just such a finding.” Grutter v. Bollinger, 288 F.3d 732, 743 (6th Cir. 2002) (en banc), aff’d, 539 U.S. 306 (2003). Because Lathrop and Keller have “direct application” in this case, this Court must follow them, “leaving to [the Supreme] Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions.” Id. at 743–44 (quoting Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 237 (1997)) (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks omitted). This is so even if Lathrop and Keller might “appear[] to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions” (i.e., Janus), as Taylor contends. Id. (quoting Agostini, 521 U.S. at 484) (internal quotation marks omitted). Applying this rule is particularly appropriate here given that Janus “d[id] not question” Keller. Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2498 (Kagan, J., dissenting).

Indeed, Justice Thomas, in his dissent from the denial of certiorari in Jarchow v. State Bar of Wisconsin, No. 19-831, 2020 WL 2814314 (U.S. June 1, 2020) (mem.), recognized that lower courts must follow Keller in cases like Taylor’s:

Respondents argue that our review of this case would be hindered because it was dismissed on the pleadings. But any challenge to our precedents will be dismissed for failure to state a claim And in any event, a record would provide little, if any, benefit to our review of the purely legal question whether Keller should be overruled. Short of a constitutional amendment, only we can rectify our own erroneous constitutional decisions.

2020 WL 2814314, at *2 (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (emphasis added). Unsurprisingly, every court considering challenges to integrated bars after Janus has declined to hold that Janus implicitly overruled Keller or Lathrop. Jarchow v. State Bar of Wis., No. 19-3444, 2019 WL 8953257, at *1 (7th Cir. Dec. 23, 2019) (“The district court, in its thorough and well-reasoned order, correctly held that the appellants’ claims are foreclosed by Keller.”), cert. denied, No. 19-831, 2020 WL 2814314 (U.S. June 1, 2020); Fleck v. Wetch, 937 F.3d 1112, 1114–15, 1118 (8th Cir. 2019) (“[A]s Janus did not overrule Keller . . . Janus does not alter our prior decision [affirming dismissal]”), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1294 (2020); McDonald v. Sorrels, No. 19-CV-00219, slip op. at 10 (W.D. Tex. May 29, 2020) (“Janus did not disturb the binding holdings of Lathrop or Keller.”); Boudreaux v. La. State Bar

Ass'n, No. 19-CV-11962, 2020 WL 137276, at *24 (E.D. La. Jan. 13, 2020) (“The Court must, therefore, apply Lathrop and Keller”); Schell v. Gurich, 409 F. Supp. 3d 1290, 1298 (W.D. Okla. 2019) (declining “to speculate as to whether the Supreme Court might reach some different result if it were to revisit either Lathrop or Keller”); Gruber v. Oregon State Bar, No. 18-CV-1591, 2019 WL 2251826, at *9 (D. Or. Apr. 1, 2019) (“[T]his court . . . must apply Keller to the cases at bar.”).

In short, because Lathrop and Keller control, this Court should enter judgment for Defendants on both of Taylor’s claims.

II. Janus did not abrogate Lathrop with respect to free association

Even if the Supreme Court authorized lower courts to recognize overrulings by implication, it would be inappropriate to do so here. Janus overruled Abood, but Lathrop long predated Abood. Moreover, Janus focused on compelled speech, not free association. That focus makes sense because the right to free association protects the right to associate (or not) only for purposes of engaging in activities otherwise protected by the First Amendment. Unions, whose raison d’être is to speak on behalf of employees, implicate this right. By contrast, integrated bars like SBM do not exist primarily to engage in expressive activities; rather, SBM’s chief focus is regulating and improving the legal profession for the benefit of Michigan’s citizens. It is beyond dispute that Michigan constitutionally may require lawyers to associate for such purposes.

As a threshold matter, Janus is a compelled-speech case. E.g., Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2460 (“We conclude that this arrangement violates the free speech rights of nonmembers by compelling them to subsidize private speech on matters of substantial public concern.” (emphasis added)). It did not prohibit mandatory associations. Indeed, it did not even purport to prohibit burdens on public employees’ freedom to associate. To the contrary, the Court explicitly recognized that its holding did not undermine state requirements “that a union serve as exclusive bargaining agent for its employees,” which themselves work a “significant impingement on associational freedoms.” Id. at 2478.

In addition, the material differences between public-sector labor unions and integrated bar associations like SBM preclude the application of that holding to this case. To start, unlike a labor union, SBM is “not in any way [Taylor’s] exclusive representative in the collective-bargaining sense.” JSMF ¶ 47, PageID.93. In contrast to union members, Taylor and SBM’s other members are always free to speak and join other associations that disagree with SBM. Id. ¶¶ 46–48, PageID.93.

Moreover, the First Amendment does not protect the right to associate for any purpose; rather, it protects the “right to associate for the purpose of engaging in those activities protected by the First Amendment—speech, assembly, petition for the redress of grievances, and the exercise of religion.” Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 618 (1984) (emphasis added); see also Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2463 (“The right to eschew association for expressive purposes is likewise protected.” (emphasis added) (collecting cases)). Associations that engage in activities not otherwise protected by the First Amendment do not fall within the right’s scope. See, e.g., City of Dall. v. Stanglin, 490 U.S. 19, 25 (1989) (“We think the activity of these dance-hall patrons—coming together to engage in recreational dancing—is not protected by the First Amendment. Thus this activity qualifies neither as a form of ‘intimate association’ nor as a form of ‘expressive association’”); Watson v. Fraternal Order of Eagles, 915 F.2d 235, 244 (6th Cir. 1990) (“[The Eagles] seems to be simply a drinking club. As such, the application of § 1981 to its conduct does not violate the freedom to associate.”).

Labor unions implicate this right: speech on behalf of members is all but their exclusive activity and their reason for being. Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2474 (“[W]hen a union negotiates with the employer or represents employees in disciplinary proceedings, the union speaks” (emphasis added)). By contrast, as Lathrop recognized, 367 U.S. at 839–43 (plurality opinion), and as is clearly the case here, integrated bars principally engage in nonexpressive activities. For instance, SBM engages in the following nonexpressive activities, among others:

- a. Collects license fees and administers licensing requirements.
- b. Investigates the character and fitness of candidates for admission to the Michigan bar.
- c. Maintains the official record of attorneys licensed to practice in Michigan.
- d. Operates and supports its governance mechanisms, including the Board of Commissioners and the Representative Assembly.
- e. Investigates and prosecutes the unauthorized practice of law.
- f. Administers IOLTA financial institution registrations.
- g. Issues ethics opinions interpreting the Michigan Rules of Professional Conduct and the Michigan Code of Judicial Conduct.

- h. Provides ethics counseling to lawyers and judges through its Ethics Helpline.
- i. Administers the Client Protection Fund to reimburse clients whose attorneys misappropriate funds.
- j. Administers the Lawyers and Judges Assistance Program, which assists attorneys and judges with substance abuse, mental health, and general wellness issues.
- k. Coordinates pro bono, legal aid, and access to justice initiatives.
- l. Provides the Practice Management Resource Center, a broad-based information clearinghouse and resource center for Michigan lawyers for services and goods necessary to successfully manage a legal practice.
- m. Provides finance, administration, and human resources department support to the Attorney Grievance Commission and the Attorney Discipline Board.

JSMF ¶¶ 27, 66, PageID.88–89, 96.

Aside from the Client Protection Fund, Taylor ignores these nonexpressive SBM activities. Br. at 22–28, PageID.167–73. Although Taylor asserts that the existence of the Client Protection Fund somehow violates her First Amendment rights, Br. at 26–27, PageID.171–72, she nowhere explains how the Client Protection Fund constitutes an expressive activity that implicates the First Amendment. It does not. The Client Protection Fund is straightforward: it reimburses clients for reimbursable losses caused by attorney misconduct within the scope of the fund’s rules, and it uses money paid by attorneys to do so. JSMF ¶¶ 28, 33, PageID.90–91. Similar programs exist in all 50 states and the District of Columbia, and in all but two states—including states that do not have integrated bars—the programs are funded with mandatory fees exacted on licensed attorneys.

Id. ¶ 29, PageID.90. It is impossible to discern how the Client Protection Fund and its counterparts in the remaining states and District of Columbia have anything to do with the First Amendment.

In sum, the Client Protection Fund and SBM's other nonexpressive activities—to which the vast majority of a member's dues are allocated, id. ¶ 43, PageID.92—do not implicate the First Amendment. See United States v. United Foods, 533 U.S. 405, 414 (2001) (“[In Keller, t]hose who were required to pay a subsidy for the speech of the association already were required to associate for other purposes, making the compelled contribution of moneys to pay for expressive activities a necessary incident of a larger expenditure for an otherwise proper goal requiring the cooperative activity.” (emphasis added)); Falk v. State Bar of Mich., 342 N.W.2d 504, 512 (Mich. 1983) (opinion of Boyle, J.) (“In connection with plaintiff's challenges to non-political activities of the bar, we find that plaintiff has not met his burden of proof in showing an injury to a protected First Amendment interest.”); see also United States v. Frame, 885 F.2d 1119, 1131 (3d Cir. 1989) (“[W]e find that the aspect of the Beef Promotion Act which imposes the assessments for research purposes qualifies as neither ‘expressive’ nor ‘intimate’ association, and therefore does not implicate Frame's first amendment rights.”), abrogated on other grounds by Johanns v. Livestock Mktg. Ass'n, 544 U.S. 550 (2005). Although Taylor “may feel that [her] money is not being well-spent,” that “does not mean that [she] ha[s] a First Amendment complaint.” Ellis v. Bhd. of Ry. Emps., 466 U.S. 435, 456 (1984).

It is beyond dispute that Michigan has the power to require professionals to “associate” for purposes of licensing and regulation. E.g., Williamson v. Lee Optical of Okla. Inc., 348 U.S. 483, 488 (1955) (“The day is gone when this Court uses the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to strike down state laws, regulatory of business and industrial conditions, because they may be unwise, improvident, or out of harmony with a particular school of thought.” (collecting cases)). “States have a compelling interest in the practice of professions within their boundaries, and . . . as part of their power to protect the public health, safety, and other valid interests they have broad power to establish standards for licensing practitioners and regulating the practice of professions.” Goldfarb v. Va. State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 792 (1975). Michigan’s interest is “especially great” in the context of lawyers “since lawyers are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice, and have historically been officers of the courts.” Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass’n, 436 U.S. 447, 460 (1978) (quoting Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 792) (internal quotation marks omitted). SBM is the means through which the Michigan Legislature and the Michigan Supreme Court have rationally decided to serve this interest for more than 80 years. Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.901; Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.904.

Michigan’s and other states’ long history of reliance on the integrated bar model provides further support for concluding that Janus did not abrogate Lathrop. See, e.g., Hilton v. S.C. Pub. Railways Comm’n, 502 U.S. 197, 202 (1991) (“Stare decisis has added force when the legislature, in the public sphere, and citizens, in the private realm, have acted in reliance on a previous decision, for in this instance overruling the decision would dislodge settled rights and expectations or require an extensive legislative response.”). SBM has been an essential component of Michigan’s regulation of lawyers and the administration of justice for nearly a century—predating even Lathrop. Undoing that integration would force the Michigan Legislature and Supreme Court to resolve thorny logistical and legal questions. Would a yet-to-be-created state agency assume SBM’s functions? Would SBM continue to exist as a voluntary bar association, or would it be entirely subsumed into this new entity? How would the new agency be funded? How would it be governed? Janus offers no reason to force Michigan, its courts, its lawyers, and its citizens to bear the significant costs associated with resolving these and other questions.

For all these reasons, there is no basis to conclude that Michigan’s mandatory-SBM-membership rule violates Taylor’s right to free association.

Lathrop held that mandatory membership rules for attorneys are constitutional and compels judgment for Defendants on Taylor’s free-association claim.

III. On the merits, Taylor’s compelled-speech claim fails

Taylor’s claim that, under Janus, SBM’s mandatory dues facially violate her right to free speech because SBM applies a portion⁸ of those dues “to speech and positions with which the members may not agree” (Compl. ¶¶ 5, 39, PageID.2, 6)

⁸ Taylor implicitly contends that all dues other than those for the Attorney Grievance Commission and the Attorney Discipline Board fund speech. That is untrue, as discussed herein. But SBM admits it allocates a small portion of each member’s mandatory dues to advocating public policy matters germane to the legal profession.

also fails on the merits. Keller still stands. Further, SBM's mandatory dues requirement survives First Amendment scrutiny because the dues fund government speech that is unfettered by the First Amendment and, in the alternative, because the requirement serves compelling state interests that cannot be served by another means that is significantly less restrictive of First Amendment rights.

A. Janus did not abrogate Keller

The Supreme Court has foreclosed lower courts from considering whether Janus implicitly abrogated Keller. It would be wrong to conclude that was Janus's effect in any event. In Harris, the precursor to and foundation for Janus, the Supreme Court reaffirmed Keller's holding. And Janus's reasons for discounting the state interests justifying agency fees are not applicable to the distinct interests justifying SBM's mandatory dues. Finally, the material differences between unions and SBM means that analogizing SBM to a labor union is inappropriate.

1. The Supreme Court reaffirmed Keller in Janus's precursor

Concluding that Janus implicitly overruled Keller makes little sense given the Supreme Court's explicit recognition of Keller's continuing vitality in Janus's precursor. Janus was the last in a trilogy of cases—all with majority opinions authored by Justice Alito—that led to the overruling of Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, 431 U.S. 209 (1977). In the second⁹ of those cases, Harris v. Quinn, 134 S. Ct. 2618 (2014), the Court harshly criticized Abood's rationale, 134 S. Ct. at ⁹ The trilogy began with Knox v. Service Employees International Union, 567 U.S. 298 (2012).

2632–34, and applied the “exacting scrutiny” test later employed in Janus to strike down a state law authorizing public-sector unions to charge agency fees to certain nonmembers, id. at 2639, 2644.

Despite its criticism of Abood and its application of exacting scrutiny, the Court made clear that its decision did not “call [Keller] into question.” Id. at 2643. To the contrary, the Court observed that Keller “fits comfortably within the [exacting scrutiny] framework applied in” Harris:

Licensed attorneys are subject to detailed ethics rules, and the bar rule requiring the payment of dues was part of this regulatory scheme. The portion of the rule that we upheld served the “State’s interest in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services.” States also have a strong interest in allocating to the members of the bar, rather than the general public, the expense of ensuring that attorneys adhere to ethical practices. Thus, our decision in this case is wholly consistent with our holding in Keller.

Id. at 2643–44 (emphasis added) (quoting Keller, 496 U.S. at 14) (citation omitted).

Given Janus’s relationship to Harris, in both rationale and authorship, the Court’s recognition that Keller fits within the exacting scrutiny framework applied in Harris is a strong indicator that Keller survived Janus.

2. Janus’s criticism of Abood does not carry over to Keller

Janus’s reasons for rejecting Abood also do not carry over to Keller. Janus considered whether the state interests identified in Abood—the interests in labor peace and eliminating free riders—could justify agency fees under exacting scrutiny. 138 S. Ct. at 2465–66. Janus held that Abood’s assumption that agency fees were necessary to promote labor peace was empirically wrong, id. at 2465, and that the interest in avoiding union free riders could not overcome a First Amendment objection given the significant benefits that unions derive from being designated as the exclusive representatives of employees, id. at 2466–69.

By contrast, Keller did not turn on the state’s interests in promoting labor peace and eliminating free riders. To be sure, to support its conclusion that the California bar was not a government agency for First Amendment purposes, the Court recognized “a substantial analogy between the relationship of the State Bar and its members . . . and the relationship of employee unions and their members” in that bar members are called upon to pay their fair share of the bar’s costs. 496 U.S. at 12. But what justified the integrated bar was the state’s interest “in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services.” Id. at 12–13; accord Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2643–44 (recognizing as well the state’s “strong interest in allocating to the members of the bar, rather than the general public, the expense of ensuring that attorneys adhere to ethical practices”). Janus’s rejection of states’ interests in labor peace and eliminating free riders of labor unions does not undermine the states’ legitimate and strong interests in regulating lawyers and improving the quality of legal services. McDonald v. Sorrels, No. 19-CV-00219, slip op. at 11 (W.D. Tex. May 29, 2020) (“Janus’s reassessment of the state interests that Aboud concluded justified agency fee arrangements did not undermine Keller’s recognition of the very different state interests in professional regulation and legal-service quality served by integrated bars.”).

Janus also criticized Abood for drawing an impossible line between union expenditures that constitutionally may be charged to nonmembers and those that may not. 138 S. Ct. at 2481. Despite twice revisiting the issue, the Court observed, “States and unions have continued to ‘give it a try’” in litigation. Id. The same is not true for the line drawn in Keller, especially in SBM’s experience. The Supreme Court has not once sought to clarify Keller’s line; to the contrary, it has now denied certiorari twice in cases seeking to revisit Keller. Moreover, since Keller was decided, no party has filed a lawsuit challenging SBM’s compliance with Keller, and SBM has received only a single member challenge since 2004. JSMF ¶¶ 44–45, PageID.92–93. Unlike Abood, Keller has proven eminently workable.

3. SBM is materially different from a labor union

SBM stands in stark contrast to a public-sector union in terms of its purpose, functions, speech, composition, and enhancement of member speech.

a. SBM has a public purpose; unions advance private interests

SBM is a public body corporate that exists primarily to serve the public interest. Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.901; JSMF Ex. A (RCSBM) at R. 1, PageID.99 (“[SBM] shall . . . aid in promoting improvements in the administration of justice and advancements in jurisprudence, in improving relations between the legal profession and the public, and in promoting the interests of the legal profession in this state.”). When SBM speaks, it speaks to advance that interest and not to represent the private interests of any individual lawyer. By contrast, public-sector unions exist to represent their employees at the bargaining table. Unlike a union, the benefits SBM provides to its members are incidental to its operations for the public's benefit.

b. SBM's primary activities are regulatory and nonexpressive; unions' primary activities are expressive

As discussed in detail above, SBM's primary activities are nonexpressive and relate to regulating the legal profession in Michigan and improving the quality of legal services. See supra Section II. By contrast, unions exist primarily, if not exclusively, to speak on behalf of their members. Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2474; see also supra Section II. The fact that SBM's speech is "a necessary incident of a" larger, and otherwise proper, regulatory program materially distinguishes it from speech by a mandatory association, like a union, whose "principal object is speech itself." United States v. United Foods, 533 U.S. 405, 414–15 (2001); accord Glickman v. Wileman Bros. & Elliott, Inc., 521 U.S. 457, 469 (1997) (in upholding compelled speech subsidy, emphasizing that "[t]he business entities that are compelled to fund the generic advertising at issue in this litigation do so as part of a" broader regulatory program).

c. SBM speaks on issues related to the legal profession and the administration of justice; unions speak on controversial political issues

Public-sector labor unions' collective bargaining activities have a unique "political valence" given the mushrooming burden of public employee wages and benefits. Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2483; see also Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2632 ("In the public sector, core issues such as wages, pensions, and benefits are important political issues . . ."). And as part of their core collective bargaining activities, public-sector unions speak out on contentious topics “such as climate change, the Confederacy, sexual orientation and gender identity, evolution, and minority religions.” Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2476 (footnotes omitted). Speech on such “sensitive political topics” understandably “occupies the highest rung of the hierarchy of First Amendment values and merits special protection.” Id. (quoting Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 452 (2011)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

By contrast, SBM’s speech, though on the subject of an essential government function, is far more apolitical and benign. By order of the Michigan Supreme Court, SBM may fund activities of an ideological nature only if they reasonably relate to:

- (A) the regulation and discipline of attorneys;
- (B) the improvement of the functioning of the courts;
- (C) the availability of legal services to society;
- (D) the regulation of attorney trust accounts; and
- (E) the regulation of the legal profession, including the education, the ethics, the competency, and the integrity of the profession.

JSMF Ex. C (Admin. Order No. 2004-01) at 1, PageID.130. These topics do not have the same “political valence,” Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2483, as issues like climate change, the Confederacy, or sexual orientation and gender identity. The fact that Taylor herself fails to identify even a single SBM position with which she disagrees—aside from the existence of the integrated bar—proves the point. As a result, SBM’s activities do not raise the same level of First Amendment concern as the speech at issue in the public labor union cases.

d. SBM's members are officers of the court with special obligations

SBM comprises all lawyers licensed to practice law in Michigan, not state employees with a variety of duties. As lawyers, all SBM members have a foundational ethical obligation to “seek improvement of the law, the administration of justice[,] and the quality of service rendered by the legal profession.” See JSMF ¶ 60, PageID.94–95; MRPC 1.0 cmt. They should “aid the legal profession in pursuing these objectives and should help the bar regulate itself in the public interest.” JSMF ¶ 60, PageID.94–95; MRPC 1.0 cmt. In other words, “[w]hile lawyers act in part as ‘self-employed businessmen,’ they also act ‘as trusted agents of their clients, and as assistants to the court in search of a just solution to disputes.’” Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass’n, 436 U.S. 447, 460 (1978) (quoting Cohen v. Hurley, 366 U.S. 117, 124 (1961)). Indeed, “lawyers are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice.” Goldfarb v. Va. State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 792 (1975) (collecting cases).

SBM provides a crucial platform for all Michigan lawyers to meet these obligations. It assembles lawyer viewpoints from across the spectrum of practices, geography, and ideology to produce valuable, broad-based input on issues related to the regulation and discipline of attorneys, the functional improvement of the Michigan court system, the availability of legal services to the public, the regulation of attorney trust accounts, and the regulation of the legal profession. See JSMF Ex. C (Admin. Order No. 2004-01) at 1–2, PageID.130–31. A voluntary bar, by definition, does not create the same opportunities for all lawyers in a state or the same benefits to the public. See JSMF ¶ 62, PageID.95.

Moreover, unlike unions which deduct agency fees from employees' pay, SBM collects dues from licensed attorneys—a group that is “trained to understand and appreciate legal communications.” Fleck v. Wetch, 937 F.3d 1112, 1117 (8th Cir. 2019), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1294 (2020). SBM members must affirmatively act to renew their membership each year. “Though membership is mandatory, it still involves a relatively comfortable relationship in which the member is encouraged to raise issues or seek information from” SBM. Id. at 1118.

e. SBM's members retain their ability to speak out

Unions and SBM also sharply contrast in their restrictions on member speech. Unions exist to speak at the bargaining table for the employees they represent. Those employees may not bargain directly with their employers, nor may they choose another agent to represent them. E.g., Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2460 (describing Illinois's system). By contrast, SBM members are free to advocate within the bar and publicly. JSMF ¶¶ 46–47, PageID.93. They can join voluntary bars and special-interest groups that take positions contrary to SBM's. Id. at ¶ 48, PageID.93. These features diminish any First Amendment concerns raised by SBM's expressive activities. Cf. Glickman, 521 U.S. at 469 (agricultural cooperative's speech differed from other cases because “the marketing orders impose no restraint on the freedom of any producer to communicate any message to any audience”).

Against all this, Taylor contends that “[t]he very fact th[at] SBM can be said to speak for all lawyers amplifies its voice, and therefore drowns out individual objecting lawyers.” Br. at 24, PageID.169. But SBM’s expressive activities are structured to enhance, not restrict, member speech. Under the Michigan Supreme Court’s administrative order governing SBM’s ideological activities, SBM must provide members at least two weeks’ notice, via its website, that SBM may consider taking a position on proposed legislation at an upcoming meeting. JSMF Ex. C (Admin. Order No. 2004-01) at 2, PageID.131. That notice must “include a brief summary of the legislation, a link to the text and status of the pending legislation on the Michigan Legislature website, and a statement that members may express their opinion to [SBM] at the meeting, electronically, or by written or telephonic communication.” Id. The same website must provide an opportunity for SBM members to respond electronically and publish the comments of members who wish to make their positions public. Id.

After the notice period, whether to support the legislation may be taken up at a public meeting of SBM’s Board of Commissioners or Representative Assembly. Id. SBM members may make comments at such meetings. Id. The results of all Board and Assembly votes must be posted to SBM’s website as soon as possible after the vote and published in the next issue of the Michigan Bar Journal. Id.

These procedures support SBM members’ speech on topics of interest to the legal profession. It stands to reason that some SBM members learn of legislation only because of the bar’s pre- and post-position notification procedures. And if a member desires to make a public comment about pending legislation, SBM provides that member a platform to do so.

* * * * *

In short, the analogy of SBM to public labor unions is poor. SBM exists to serve the public, and it does so through activities that are primarily nonexpressive in nature. SBM's limited speech concerns the regulation of lawyers and the administration of justice, not the hot-button political issues of our time. SBM's structure enables Michigan attorneys to meet their ethical obligations to improve the law and aid in the administration of justice. And in all cases, SBM encourages its members to speak out on the issues on which it takes positions.

B. SBM's expressive activities are constitutional, even under Janus

SBM is entitled to summary judgment on Taylor's speech claim for two alternative reasons. First, under post-Keller case law, SBM's speech qualifies as government, rather than private, speech, placing SBM's mandatory dues requirement outside the First Amendment's scope. Second, even if SBM's speech is private speech, SBM's mandatory dues requirement passes Janus exacting scrutiny.

1. SBM's speech is government speech and therefore not subject to the First Amendment

As a threshold matter, if this Court concludes that Janus abrogated Keller, it should revisit Keller's holding that speech by an integrated bar like SBM is private, rather than government, speech. Keller, 496 U.S. at 13. "The Free Speech Clause restricts government regulation of private speech; it does not regulate government speech." Pleasant Grove City v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 467 (2009) (collecting cases). For that reason, the Supreme Court’s compelled subsidy cases have “consistently respected the principle that ‘[c]ompelled support of a private association is fundamentally different from compelled support of government.’” Johanns v. Livestock Mktg. Ass’n, 544 U.S. 550, 559 (2005) (quoting Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, 431 U.S. 209, 259 n.13 (1977) (Powell, J., concurring in the judgment)). As both Taylor and her attorneys have admitted,¹⁰ SBM is a state agency, and SBM’s activities are at all times subject to the Michigan Supreme Court’s complete control. Accordingly, Michigan’s rule compelling attorneys to support SBM’s expressive activities is not subject to the First Amendment.

To begin, Keller observed that the bar was funded by assessments on lawyers rather than legislative appropriations. 496 U.S. at 11. But subsequent cases hold that “[t]he compelled-subsidy analysis is altogether unaffected by whether the funds . . . are raised by general taxes or through a targeted assessment.” Johanns, 544 U.S. at 562.

Next, Keller noted that the bar comprised only lawyers. 496 U.S. at 11. But the Supreme Court has held that a group composed solely of beef industry members nonetheless engaged in government speech. Johanns, 544 U.S. at 553–54, 567.

¹⁰ In their press release regarding the filing of this case, the Mackinac Center for Public Policy described SBM as “a state agency,” and Taylor stated, “Thanks to the Janus decision, public agencies can no longer require a captive membership.” Press Release, Mackinac Center for Public Policy, Mackinac Center Sues the State Bar of Michigan for First Amendment Violation (Aug. 22, 2019) (emphasis added), available at <https://www.mackinac.org/mackinac-center-sues-the-state-bar-of-michigan-for-first-amendment-violation>.

Finally, Keller found it important that the California bar did not have final authority to regulate the legal profession and, as a result, provided essentially advisory services to the California Supreme Court. 496 U.S. at 11. But the Supreme Court has since held that an essentially advisory industry group was the government for First Amendment purposes. Johanns, 544 U.S. at 554 (explaining that the challenged law’s assessment “is to be used to fund beef-related projects, including promotional campaigns, designed by the Operating Committee and approved by the Secretary” (emphasis added)).

Moreover, the long history of advisory commissions at the federal and state levels—which undoubtedly are part of government—casts significant doubt on the proposition that an entity must have final regulatory authority to engage in government speech. E.g., William T. Egar, Cong. Research Serv., R45328, Designing Congressional Commissions: Background and Considerations for Congress 1–2 (2018) (reporting that 110 congressional advisory commissions were established by statute between the 101st Congress (1989–90) and the 115th Congress (2017–18)); Mich. Comp. Laws § 4.1301 (Michigan Commission on Uniform State Laws); Mich. Comp. Laws § 4.1401 (Michigan Law Revision Commission). Such commissions exist to make recommendations to the legislature regarding legislation that the legislature could enact. E.g., Mich. Comp. Laws § 4.1403 (duties of Michigan Law Reform Commission). If an entity must possess final regulatory authority to engage in government speech, then all advisory commissions necessarily engage in private speech. That is a nonsensical result.

Two post-Keller Supreme Court decisions further cement the conclusion that SBM's speech is government speech. In the first, Lebron v. National Railroad Passenger Corp., 513 U.S. 374 (1995), the Court considered whether Amtrak, which nominally is a private corporation, is the government for First Amendment speech purposes. 513 U.S. at 376–78. The Court held that, when “the Government creates a corporation by special law, for furtherance of governmental objectives, and retains for itself permanent authority to appoint a majority of the directors of that corporation, the corporation is part of the Government for purposes of the First Amendment.” Id. at 400. Each of these criteria is met here: SBM was created by a special statute, Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.901, in furtherance of the important governmental objectives of regulating the legal profession, “promoting improvements in the administration of justice and advancements in jurisprudence,” and “improving relations between the legal profession and the public,” among others, id. § 600.904; JSMF Ex. A (RCSBM) at R. 1, PageID.99. Further, although the Michigan Supreme Court appoints a minority of the members of SBM's Board of Commissioners, id. at R. 5(2)(2), PageID.104, the Court at all times has plenary authority over SBM's organization, government, conduct, and activities, Mich. Comp. Laws § 600.904.

The second case, Johanns v. Livestock Marketing Association, 544 U.S. 550, squarely addressed compelled subsidies, albeit where the subsidized entities' governmental status was in question. There, several parties in the beef industry challenged the constitutionality of the federal program responsible for the “Beef. It's What's For Dinner.” advertising campaign, among other promotional activities. 544 U.S. at 553–55. The program called for the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint a board (the “Beef Board”) composed of industry members, which in turn would convene an Operating Committee. Id. at 553–54. The Operating Committee designed certain beef-related projects, including the promotional activities, subject to the Secretary’s approval. Id. at 554. The Beef Board’s and the Operating Committee’s activities were funded by a mandatory assessment on the sale and importation of cattle and beef products. Id.

Recognizing that the First Amendment does not limit compelled support for government speech, the Supreme Court upheld the program. The Court explained that, regardless of whether the Beef Board or the Operating Committee were state actors, the government maintained effective control over the promotional campaigns’ message. Id. at 560. Congress and the Secretary “set out the overarching message and some of its elements,” and they “left the development of the remaining details to an entity whose members are answerable to the Secretary (and in some cases appointed by him as well).” Id. at 561. Further, the evidence showed that the Secretary exercised final authority over the content of each promotional message. Id. Because “the government set[] the overall message to be communicated and approve[d] every word that [was] disseminated, it [was] not precluded from relying on the government-speech doctrine merely because it solicit[ed] assistance from nongovernmental sources in developing specific messages.” Id. at 562.

“Johanns stands for the proposition that when the government determines an overarching message and retains power to approve every word disseminated at its behest, the message must be attributed to the government for First Amendment purposes.” Am. Civil Liberties Union of Tenn. v. Bredesen, 441 F.3d 370, 375 (6th Cir. 2006). SBM’s speech satisfies these conditions. Cf. id. at 386 (Martin, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (recognizing that, under the majority’s test, the speech at issue in Keller could be considered government speech). Although the Michigan Supreme Court does not approve every SBM position before it is issued, the Supreme Court retains plenary authority over SBM’s activities, including by dictating the boundaries of SBM’s speech, JSMF Ex. C (Admin. Order No. 2004-01) at 1, PageID.130, defining the objectives that SBM must consider when developing its positions, JSMF Ex. A (RCSBM) at R. 1, PageID.99, and receiving SBM’s audited financial statements each year, id. at R. 9, PageID.110.¹¹ Nothing more is required. Cf. Delano Farms Co. v. Cal. Table Grape Comm’n, 586 F.3d 1219, 1228–29 (9th Cir. 2009) (industry group engaged in government speech even though the government did not approve the messages promulgated by the group).

In short, whether viewing the question as (i) whether SBM is a government entity, or (ii) whether the government exercises sufficient control over SBM’s messages regardless of its public or private status, SBM engages in government speech for purposes of the First Amendment. That reality is fatal to Taylor’s compelled-speech claim.

2. SBM’s mandatory dues pass exacting scrutiny

What’s more, Michigan’s requirement that attorneys pay the portion of their dues that supports SBM’s expressive activities passes the “exacting scrutiny” test applied in Janus. Under exacting scrutiny, “a compelled subsidy must ‘serve a compelling state interest that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms.’” Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2465 (quoting Knox v. Serv. Emps. Int’l Union, 567 U.S. 298, 310 (2012)). Michigan’s mandatory dues requirement meets this standard.

To start, as discussed above, SBM allocates the vast majority of its members’ dues to nonexpressive activities that have nothing to do with the First Amendment. See supra Section II. Because those dues do not “subsidize the speech of other private speakers,” their exaction does not impinge on First Amendment rights. Janus, 138 S. Ct. at 2464 (emphasis added). Again, Taylor “may feel that [her] money is not being well-spent,” but that “does not mean that [she] ha[s] a First Amendment complaint.” Ellis v. Bhd. of Ry. Emps., 466 U.S. 435, 456 (1984).

With respect to the dues used to fund expression, courts have long recognized the legitimate interests that states like Michigan have in regulating the legal profession, elevating the ethical and educational standards of the bar, improving the quality of legal services, receiving input from the bar on legislation, and allocating to lawyers rather than taxpayers the cost of such activities. E.g., Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2643–44 (recognizing the “State’s interest in regulating the legal profession and improving the quality of legal services,” as well as its “strong interest in allocating to members of the bar, rather than the general public, the expense of ensuring that attorneys adhere to ethical practices”); Keller, 496 U.S. at 13–14 (interest in regulating lawyers and improving the quality of legal services); Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass’n, 436 U.S. 447, 460 (1978) (state has an “especially great” interest in regulating lawyers because they are “essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice”); Lathrop v. Donohue, 367 U.S. 820, 843 (1961) (plurality opinion) (interest in raising the quality of legal services); Falk v. State Bar of Mich., 342 N.W.2d 504, 514 (Mich. 1983) (opinion of Boyle, J.) (“There can be little doubt that the government has an interest in receiving the input of the State Bar into the legislative process.”).

Janus did not delegitimize these interests. See supra Section III.A.2. And even Taylor admits Michigan’s wide ranging interests in relation to the legal profession.¹² Given that “lawyers are essential to the primary government function of administering justice,” Goldfarb v. Va. State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 792 (1975), these interests are compelling.

There is no alternative to SBM's integrated model that serves these interests as well while simultaneously imposing a significantly lesser restriction on associational freedoms. Exacting scrutiny is not strict scrutiny, and SBM's integrated model need not be the least restrictive means of serving the state's interests. Cf. Sable Commc'ns of Cal., Inc. v. FCC, 492 U.S. 115, 126 (1989). Here, the seemingly obvious alternative to mandatory membership—a voluntary bar—is no alternative at all. To serve Michigan's interests, SBM necessarily must include all lawyers licensed to practice in Michigan. An association comprising only a subset of licensed attorneys cannot act on the whole profession. JSMF ¶ 62, PageID.95.

SBM also must necessarily engage in speech. Just like “government has to say something” to govern, Summun, 555 U.S. at 468 (quoting Johanns, 544 U.S. at 574 (Souter, J., dissenting)), SBM cannot serve Michigan's interests and fulfill its mission and purposes without speaking. SBM could not, for instance, “aid in promoting improvements in the administration of justice and advancements in jurisprudence,” JSMF Ex. A (RCSBM) at R. 1, PageID.99, without sharing its views. It also would be impossible for SBM to fulfill even its core regulatory functions, such as prosecuting the unauthorized practice of law, if it could not speak. Cf. Legal Servs. Corp. v. Velazquez, 531 U.S. 533, 548 (2001) (“There can be little doubt that the LSC Act [providing for legal assistance in noncriminal proceedings] funds constitutionally protected expression . . .”).

A voluntary bar association would be a poor substitute on this score, too. Although Michigan has an array of local and special-interest voluntary associations for lawyers and judges, none of them has the uniquely public, nonparochial character that SBM has as an arm of the Michigan Supreme Court. Nor do those voluntary associations have the duty, much less the capacity, to consider the entirety of the legal profession in Michigan when formulating their positions on matters that concern the regulation of lawyers and the administration of justice. See JSMF ¶ 62, PageID.95.

Taylor's contrary arguments do not withstand scrutiny. Taylor says that the fact that a minority of states (comprising, she asserts, a majority of the nation's lawyers) have voluntary bars conclusively proves that Michigan has a less restrictive means to achieve its interests. Br. at 24–25, PageID.169–70. Not so. Those states may well have weighed their interests differently than Michigan or decided not to serve them at all. But for the reasons discussed previously, a voluntary bar is no alternative here given Michigan's decision to serve its compelling interests.

Taylor next contends that other professionals, like doctors, are not subject to the same requirements as lawyers. Br. at 25; PageID.170. But lawyers are different from other professionals: they “are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice and have historically been ‘officers of the courts.’” Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 792. “While lawyers act in part as ‘self-employed businessmen,’ they also act ‘as trusted agents of their clients, and as assistants to the court in search of a just solution to disputes.’” Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass’n, 436 U.S. 447, 460

(1978). Lawyers also have a foundational ethical obligation to improve the law, the administration of justice, and the quality of legal services. See supra Part III.A.3.d.

Other licensed professionals do not occupy a similar role. Doctors are not sworn in as public-health officers, nor are they obligated to offer the state advice on how to carry out its public-health functions. Engineers and plumbers are not obligated to advise on the state's infrastructure. Lawyers alone have ethical obligations for an essential government function: the finding of truth in both civil and criminal matters. That difference underlies why Michigan and most other states have integrated their bars.

Taylor also argues that Michigan's interest in "monitoring and policing lawyers" can be served by the Attorney Discipline Board and the Attorney Grievance Commission alone. Br. at 25, PageID.170. Even if Michigan's interests were so narrow, Taylor ignores SBM's primary role in collecting license fees and administering licensing requirements, investigating the character and fitness of candidates for admission to the bar, maintaining the official record of attorneys licensed to practice in Michigan, and prosecuting the unauthorized practice of law, among other monitoring and policing activities. JSMF ¶ 27(a)–(c), (e), PageID.88–89. Regardless, as discussed above, Michigan's interests are not so narrow. And given that the Attorney Discipline Board's and the Attorney Grievance Commission's exclusive functions are the prosecution and adjudication of attorney ethical violations, JSMF ¶¶ 67, 69, PageID.96, those entities necessarily cannot serve Michigan's interests that extend beyond monitoring and policing, such as promoting improvements in the administration of justice and advancements in jurisprudence and prospectively enhancing the quality of legal services.

Next, Taylor contends that SBM's mandatory dues requirement does not survive exacting scrutiny because SBM's expressive activities could be funded by legislative appropriation or even voluntary dues. But "[t]he compelled-subsidy analysis is altogether unaffected by whether the funds . . . are raised by general taxes or through a targeted assessment." Johanns, 544 U.S. at 562. Reverting to a legislative appropriation would not resolve Taylor's First Amendment objection. Voluntary dues are also no substitute given Michigan's "strong interest in allocating to the members of the bar" the expenses associated with the privilege of being a lawyer. See Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2644.

Taylor last argues that the Client Protection Fund does not survive exacting scrutiny. Br. at 26, PageID.171. But as noted Section II, the Client Protection Fund is not an expressive activity and has nothing to do with the First Amendment. Taylor apparently feels that the Client Protection Fund is unwise or poorly administered. Even if that were true, she has no First Amendment complaint regarding the program.

In short, other state legislatures and courts have weighed their interests differently and opted to take a different path. Here, given the choices that the Michigan Legislature and Supreme Court have made and the absence of equally effective alternatives that impinge significantly less on lawyers' associational rights, it is inappropriate for Taylor to substitute her judgment for that of two branches of Michigan's state government. She must take her complaints to the Michigan Legislature or Michigan Supreme Court, not this Court.

CONCLUSION

Based on binding Supreme Court precedents and application of core principles in the Supreme Court's First Amendment jurisprudence, Taylor's claims fail as a matter of law. Accordingly, Defendants respectfully request that this Court deny Taylor's motion for summary judgment and enter judgment on the merits in favor of Defendants.
